Table of Contents

Acknowledgments 8
Introduction 13
Interactive interdisciplinarity and human lived reality 18
Social constructivism and biologist essentialism? 22

Chapter 1: From interpellated subjecthood to recognized vulnerability 35
On the human being, or becoming 37
Gendered to be human 38
Performativity and human identity 40
Relationality and the constitution of humanity 50
The problematic body 52
Actions 57
Judith Butler and the person 58
Desire and personhood 64
Recognition, personhood and grievability 67

Chapter 2: Being human nature 75
Language: window to human nature 77
Nature/nurture 81
Unique environment 85
Genes, personality and behavior 87
Computationalism and the individual 91
Webbed causality 93
The individual and human nature 98
Death of the self again? 100
Openness and relationality in evolutionary psychology? 107

Chapter 3: Persons becoming in relations 111
Ontology of the person 114
Relationality, space and freedom 118

Personalist and relational theological anthropology 127
The divine and the human 131
The triune Creator and the anthropological significance of Christ 136
Embodied human persons 144
"spirit," sin and the question of ethics 151

Chapter 4: Going beyond: relationality, evolutionary theory and time 157
Establishing a weak ontology of relationality 157
Re-reading the theory of evolution 162
Evolution as performativity 174
Time matters 176
The reality of body 183

Chapter 5: Kenotic personalism 193
Primacy of "person"? 194
Kenosis, vulnerability and persons: the significance of self-giving relations 200
Relation, mediation, interpellation 202
Called in time 208
The Gift of Vulnerability 212
The giving between persons 216
Kenosis and feminism 222
Kenosis and resistance 226
The gift of freedom 228
The most vulnerable? 230

Conclusion: persons, individuals and institutions 235
AI: artificial individualism? 235
Disclosing the nature/nurture problem 241
Back to school 246
Individualism and personalism in school 248

A love supreme? 256

Bibliography 259
Index 287